Conclusion

'Coxy'

In Coffs embrace, he was born one day,
A bloke unlike any, in his own unique way.
The oldest of three, a rebel from the start,
With ADHD, he followed a different heart.

School's conformity, he chose to defy,
Wagging classes, under the open sky.
At just fifteen, he ventured to the unknown,
With the headmaster's blessing, he had grown.

Working alongside his dad, meticulous and bright,
Building and designing, his true delight.
Respected in the trade, his skills did shine,
A builder and creator, one of a kind.

Four years ago, he found his soul's delight,
In fiancé Mel, his love, his heart's guiding light.
Their family grew, love knew no end,
A daughter, a son, and two stepdaughters, as friends.

A wild child, a larrikan, and a prankster, too,
A deep thinker with humour, a unique view.
Kind and caring, his heart's embrace,
He'd give you the shirt off his back with grace.

A stirrer of souls, with a laughter so loud,
He'd make us smile, he'd make us proud.
This bloke, so unforgettable, we celebrate today,
In our hearts, his spirit will forever stay.

Committal

'I Wish I Knew'

by Donna Ashworth

I saw it all, the day after I left.
I saw my family, my friends, bereft.
I saw their pain, confusion, their shock.
I realised my demons had run amok.
Of course, I mattered, of course I was loved.
Of course, I was not better off above.
Because being above, means seeing it all.
And now I know that my life wasn't small.
My life was precious.
I gave it away,
I listened to darkness, it showed me the way.
But now from here I see it a new.
If only I'd stayed and pushed on through.
But here I am looking down from afar.
Watching the pain, a lifelong scar.
I'll never be gone from the hearts that I touched.
If only I'd seen, I was always enough
